Legal pot would mean windfall for province

Cha-ching! Tax grab could mean $5 million a month: Economist

SCOTT TAYLOR
Metro in London, Ont.

An Ontario-based economist says that Colorado has proven what many have been saying all along: Legalize marijuana, regulate it and the tax dollars will come flowing in.

It's been estimated that in the first month of legalized weed sales, the state made a cool $2.1 million in taxes. That's outside of the $1.4 million it made taxing medicinal marijuana.

Richard Ivey School of Business associate professor Mike Moffatt said the tax works out to about 40 cents for each of Colorado's 5.2

Quoted

"A lot of this tax money is money that would otherwise be going to drug dealers.... Instead of financing that, why not finance schools and hospitals and all the other things our society needs?"

million people.

"Assuming the usage would be similar among Ontario's almost 13 million people, the tax the government would earn would be around (a) lofty $5 million," he said.

That's for a single month, equating to $60 million a year.

He cited a Fraser Institute report that stated the federal government could realize over a billion dollars a year if pot was legalized.

But Conservative MP Ed Holder said he couldn't disagree more with the figures. Price, he said, will still create competition between the legal outlets and drug dealers.

"That does not go away because it's been legalized," he said. "The underground economy does not go away."

A Hi-Times manager, Mike Gin, who's been in the head shop business for 25 years, argued it only makes sense for the government to cash in.

"It's a revenue generator, so why lose the money if they can tax it?" he asked.

"They could regulate it like cigarettes so that people under a certain age couldn't buy it."

Railway signals light up near site of fatal crash

False alarm. Glitch is the second in a month at site of train collision that claimed six lives

LUCY SCHOLEY

Warning signals lit up on Tuesday morning for the second time in a month at a railway crossing near the site of the infamous OC Transpo and VIA Rail collision.

Jacques Gagnon, VIA Rail's senior manager of media and community relations, said the problem was linked to a defective controller.

The City of Ottawa sent out a tweet at around 8 a.m. warning drivers to avoid the area and later sent out a memo about the incident.

RailTerm, the Ottawa-based service provider for Via Rail, was called in to fix the lights at the transitway on Fallowfield Road near Woodroffe Avenue.

The warning lights also went off on Feb. 11, and just one of the two traffic barriers lowered. The site had temporarily closed under repairs.

The Fallowfield station was the site of the tragic OC Transpo and VIA Rail train collision on Sept. 18 that killed six people and injured dozens.

Two lawsuits have since been filed against the city and the estate of the deceased bus driver.

Activists pitch plan to fight rape culture

A group of current and former students, union members and activists outlined eight proposals to combat rape culture at the University of Ottawa on Tuesday.

The call for action comes in the wake of two sexual misconduct scandals. On March 6, U of O president Allan Rock announced the Task Force on Respect and Equality to address the problem.

Isabelle Hétu, president of CUPE 2626, says the university needs their expertise.

"We have been working on this for years," she said. "I know I am young, but we have the research; we know what action to take. We are waiting for them to get in touch, but apart from lip service they have not."

Former student Pierre St-Jaques says the fact the university has not been in touch yet demonstrates why this action is necessary.

"We don't want it to be a task force run by the university," said St-Jaques. "We want (rape culture) to be discussed and we need to take action collectively — not from the top down."

Rock says he welcomes their initiative.

"I will urge the Task Force to collaborate with the independent group and to look closely at the eight recommendations they have tabled," he said.

Lian McPhail Doherty, owner of LMD Snow Removal, dealt with more frequent snowfalls this year. OONA WOODS/FOR METRO

Ottawa winter coldest in more than 2 decades

Rain, rain come back again! Don't pack up those boots just yet

OONA WOODS
ottawa@metronews.ca

"There are only two snowfalls people remember — the first one and the last one."

Ken Dale, owner of Appleseed Snowblowing Service, has a lot to say about snow. His company serves around 8,000 customers in the Ottawa area and he is not shying away from a forecast of 10 centimetres in the city Wednesday. "I hope we get more," he said. "The more snow the better. Then when we send out the renewals more people will sign up."

But Dale feels the end of winter is almost in sight.

"There's been some melting and it gives people hope. People can see the light at the end of the tunnel," he added.

Environment Canada meteorologist Geoff Coulson might just squash that hope for the region. He says along with 10 centimetres for Ottawa, Wednesday's storm is expected to bring up to 25 centimetres of snow to the Kingston and Cornwall area.

"People keep telling me, 'there can't be more coming; winter has to be over now,' and I say, 'I hope you're right,'" said Coulson, adding that spring is still a few weeks away.

"I hope you wake up to a sunny day at dawn, but I don't think you will."

But has this winter been snowier than normal?

Lian McPhail Doherty, owner of LMD Snow Removal says no, but the snowfall has been more frequent.

"Last year it was wet and heavy snow," he said. "This year we've had consistent little snowfalls of five centimeters," he said, explaining that five centimeters is the bare minimum for snow removal.

Coulson does say it has been a long cold winter, noting that Ottawa temperatures in December to February have been the coldest since 1993.

Appeal 'a distraction' in sexual assault case: Lawyer

An Ottawa lawyer says the Crown is "reopening a can of worms" by seeking to appeal a sexual assault case in which the judge discussed evidence he found on a dating website with a detective after delivering his verdict.

Céline Dostaler's client was acquitted on Dec. 18, 2013 after spending 14 months in custody facing charges of sexual assault and forcible confinement against his 43-year-old wife.

But in a January affidavit, Vikki Bair, Crown attorney for the City of Ottawa, said she was "very concerned" by what lead Det. Erin Lehman said Superior Court Justice Timothy D. Ray had told her.

According to Lehman's statement, the judge had her come to his chambers after the trial to tell her he had created a fake profile on the dating website Match.com the night before the verdict and found evidence "that would have been able to 'hang' the victim with all the available information."

At the end of the conversation, Ray told Lehman she had been a "bright, happy face" in a sombre crowd, and they should have lunch or coffee some time.

On Monday, the appeal court granted the Crown an extension to appeal the acquittals on the grounds of "reasonable apprehension bias."

But Dostaler told Metro Tuesday the decision is a "distraction from my client's innocence."

"He was acquitted on the merits of a sexual assault and forcible confinement and I think this is more of a side track issue and it doesn't change the fact that I think the Crown didn't have the strongest case," said Dostaler.

Although Dostaler said she has not seen the Match.com profile in question, she believes the judge made the right decision based on evidence tested in court.

"I think the judge's decision was proper and we had already had enough information to discredit (the complainant) and she was discredited in court," she said. "(My client) is absolutely upset because he feels this is a distraction of his acquittal."

The accused was found guilty of the lesser charge of assault and pleaded guilty to two breaches after the Crown finished its case.

The matter returns to court March 19.

Ottawa Redblacks sign wide receiver Travon Patterson

The Ottawa Redblacks have added another wide receiver to its football squad in the speedy Travon Patterson, who has CFL experience with Montreal and B.C.

The 25-year-old from Long Beach, Calif., played college ball with the University of Southern California (USC) from 2006-2010, transferring to the University of Colorado for his senior year, where he caught for 20 passes and 127 yards with one touchdown in eight games.

The five-foot-nine, 170-pound athlete also competed for USC track team, running the leadoff leg for the school's 400-metre relay team.

The Redblacks open training camp in June and open their inaugural season July 3 when they visit the Winnipeg Blue Bombers. The Redblacks play their home opener at the brand new TD Place at Lansdowne Park July 18 against the Toronto Argonauts.

Light Rail Transit

'Unanticipated soil conditions' the cause of Waller Street collapse

Rideau Transit Group (RTG) has confirmed that the road collapse on Waller Street — the three-metre-by-three-metre hole that opened up five metres above the tunneling excavation for the city's Light Rail Transit (LRT) system Feb. 20 — was caused by "unanticipated soil conditions."

Because geotechnical risk is the responsibility of RTG, it has commenced a claim through its insurance to pay for any costs associated with the collapse.

RTG will begin removing a bulkhead structure today so that tunneling for the LRT can resume.

In the meantime, storm and sanitary sewer lines have been reconnected and full access to 50 Laurier Street has been restored.

Excavation continues at the other two digging sites with the West Portal at 52 metres and the Central Shaft at 32 metres.

National Arts Centre English Theatre unveils season with flare

Trying to be the best. The NAC English Theatre aims to be a showcase theatre for all of Canada

TANYA KIRNISHNI
ottawa@metronews.ca

It looked like the carnival had come to the National Arts Centre Tuesday, as the English Theatre used Ouija boards, card tricks and magic balls to unveil the new season.

The quirky costumes and props set the tone for an exciting lineup of performances.

"We travel the country year round to seek out fantastic productions to thrill our audience the way that they have thrilled us," said Jillian Keiley, artistic director of the NAC English Theatre.

The heart of the season is the yearly Ensemble, which is composed of performers from across the country. Program choices are inspired by the actors in the Ensemble.

"We brought them together because of their shared capacity for wit, their fiery passion and their political intelligence," Keiley added.

From the international canon of theatrical comedy, The Importance of Being Earnest will start off the season, featuring Ensemble member Alex McCooye as Algernon.

"I love doing good stories, being part of storytelling," said Natasha Greenblatt, another member of the Ensemble. With a strong background in children's theatre, Greenblatt will play the title character in Alice Through the Looking-Glass as part of

Other productions include Stuff Happens, a political drama about the Iraq invasion of 2003, Take Me Back to Jefferson, a family odyssey set along the Mississippi, as well as Needles and Opium, an emotional journey about creative struggle.

From the Studio Series, audiences can look forward to the musical production of Do You Want What I Have Got? A Craigslist Cantata, the coming out story of Obaab- arima, and Dostoevsky's dark satire in The Double.

"Canada is our stage, so we do our part to make stronger works on Canadian stages," said Keiley, highlighting NAC's initiative The Collaborations. By investing in works across the country, English Theatre encourages growth in the Canadian canon of theatrical works. Through the Ensemble program and The Collaborations, the NAC English Theatre aims to be a showcase theatre for all of Canada.

Excited to share these shows with the audience, Keiley said, "They will be surprised by the breadth and depth of the season."

Indie rockers Cuff the Duke to play at the NAC

Whatever your musical tastes, the latest band coming to Ottawa is sure to draw in a crowd.

Alternative indie rock group Cuff the Duke will be playing at the National Arts Centre on March 15.

Cuff the Duke has just released its latest album Union, which follows on the heels of Morning Comes, the first of the two-part album. Morning Comes was nominated for Juno's Adult Alternative Album of the Year in 2012 — the band's second Juno nomination since Way Down Here in 2010.

"We decided to do this concept theme so that visually when you put the records side by side they go together," says Wayne Petti, vocalist and guitarist for the band. There is also musical interaction between the two albums as some of the songs on Union are responses to songs on Morning Comes.

"Morning Comes is reflective, looking back and criticizing, while Union is more about looking forward," says Petti, explaining the juxtaposition of the two records.

"Union is most consistently electric based — there is a little more sonic experimentation."

Cuff the Duke has a signature acoustic style, but in this latest album Petti says the band wanted to explore some interesting instrumental sounds.

"We've been touring for 12 years," says Petti.

The band was formed in Oshawa but has since made Toronto its home. Although Cuff the Duke has opened for other groups before, its members are excited to be playing their own show at the NAC for the first time.

Tickets can be purchased for $25 on the NAC website.

Ottawa area jobs expected to flatline in Q2: Survey

Stalled growth. 77% of local employers aren't looking to staff up, research shows

joe.lofaro@metronews.ca

Job hunters in the Ottawa area might be out of luck as a new survey is projecting the employment outlook in the nation's capital to be "flat" in the second quarter of 2014.

Results from the Manpower Employment Outlook Survey, released Tuesday, shows that 77 per cent of area employers are not planning on hiring new staff through the next quarter, from April to June. Only about 13 per cent are expected to add to their payrolls, while seven per cent are anticipating cutbacks.

About three per cent of employers are unsure about their hiring intentions, according to the survey.

More than 1,900 public and private sector employers across Canada participated in the survey.

On a national scale, 78 per cent of employers plan to maintain their existing staffing levels for the next quarter, while 16 per cent plan to increase their staffing levels, according to the survey data.

"With seasonal variations removed from the data, Ottawa's second quarter Net Employment Outlook of -2 per cent is a slight decrease ... when compared to the previous quarterly Outlook," said Lisa MacInnis of Manpower's Kingston office in a news release. "It is also a 10 percentage point decrease from the Outlook reported during the same time last year, indicating a limited hiring pace for the upcoming months."

The decreases in Ottawa are in line with stalled growth forecast for Ontario and Quebec for the upcoming quarter.

"There are some bright spots amidst the slow growth, with employers in the Construction and Transportation & Public Utilities industry sectors expecting the strongest gains," Byrne Luft, vice-president of operations for Manpower Canada, said in the release.

Any good news?

Gov't growth will keep us afloat: Prof.

Despite an expected hiring freeze in the Ottawa area from April to June, a University of Ottawa economics professor says he is optimistic about the city's long-term employment prospects.

"The government is a big industry. Even though they are cutting (back), in the long run they are going to keep growing," said Gilles Grenier. "It's a large metropolitan area ... and people prefer Ottawa to bigger places like Toronto and Montreal because there's less congestion and they can still work from a close distance to their home."

The federal government will remain a major employer in the region along with the industries that are attached to it, such as the high-tech sector, he added.

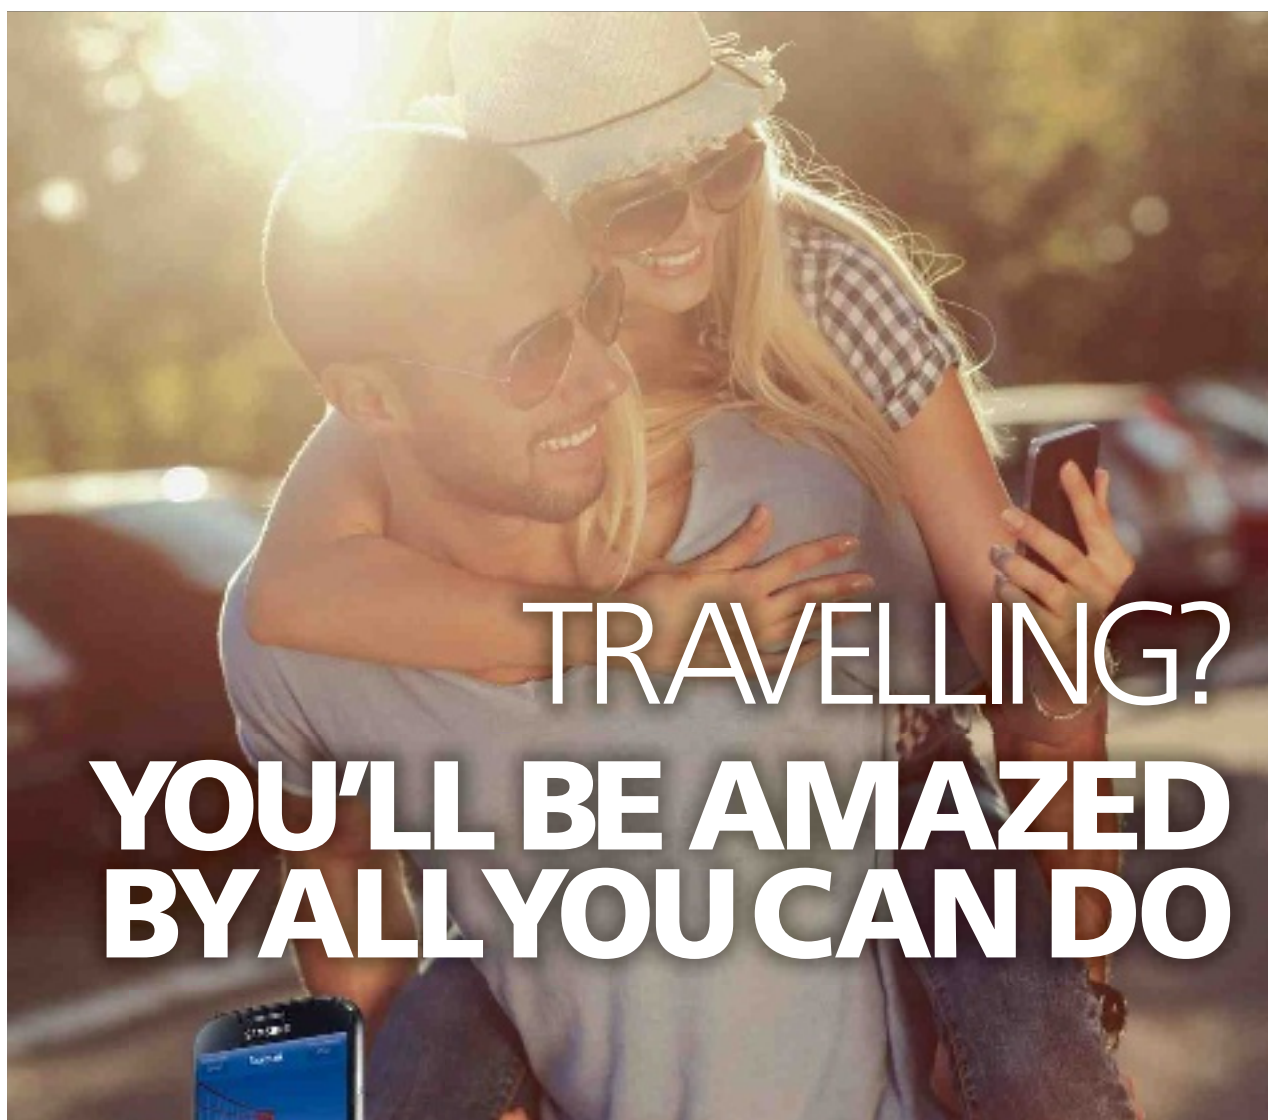

"I would say the region is having a good future, (but) maybe I'm the optimistic kind," he said.

Unfortunately, the April to June period is a crucial time when students fresh out of the gates of university are hungry for jobs. Grenier says they will need to be patient until the hiring outlook improves.

"The university population is very high these days and probably the prospects for the students are not as good now as they were maybe 10 years ago," said Grenier. "Sometimes students are willing to wait up to one year to get a good job. That's part of life."

'Miracle baby' is doing well — and has a name

Mireya. Halifax mother whose newborn was declared dead settled on a Spanish name that means 'miracle'

RUTH DAVENPORT
Metro in Halifax

The mother of the "miracle baby" born at the IWK Health Centre in Halifax this week says the baby appears to be making a steady recovery — and yes, she has a name.

Robin Cyr's child wasn't breathing when she was delivered around 3 a.m. March 8 after a complicated birth.

The baby was declared dead after about 25 minutes, Cyr said — but suddenly started breathing on her own after staff stopped trying to revive her.

Since Monday, when Metro first published Cyr's story, it has been picked up by international media, including the British publication the Daily Mail and the New York Daily News.

But Cyr said she still hasn't processed the reality of almost having lost her fourth child.

"It didn't hit me yet," she said, adding she's been "very busy" with visits from friends and concerned relatives — all of which she's trying to juggle around caring for her newborn.

PQ. Independent Quebec would welcome Canadian tourists, Marois says

An independent Quebec would have no borders and would open its arms to tourists from Canada, Parti Québécois Leader Pauline Marois said Tuesday.

Marois was asked on the campaign trail whether an independent Quebec would be more attractive as a tourism destination.

"It won't change our landscapes, that's for sure," she said. "We'll still be able to go see the Rockies out west and go to Prince Edward Island and they'll be able to come here. There won't be any borders or tolls."

Marois then said an independent Quebec would have more latitude and freedom but she did not immediately elaborate on the border issue.

Later in the day, Marois sought to clarify the border comments when she agreed with a reporter's assertion that an independent Quebec would be like the European Union, where there is free movement of citizens.

"That's what it means, but

For his part, Liberal Leader Philippe Couillard said the PQ's constant musings on Quebec's future only serve to hurt the province.

Cyberbullies have grown up and are now in universities

Study findings. One in five undergraduates has been cyberbullied through Facebook, text messages and email

Research out of Simon Fraser University suggests that the online abuse that has been so prevalent on the teenage battlefield is carrying through to the arena of adults at Canadian universities.

Papers to be presented at a symposium in Vancouver on Wednesday say that undergraduate students are harassing their peers on social media, instructors are on the receiving end of student-led online smear campaigns, and faculty members are belittling their colleagues in emails.

"When you look at cyberbullying among younger kids, or kids in middle and high school, usually by age 15, it dies off," said education Prof. Wanda Cassidy, who worked on the study with two others.

The research team surveyed over 2,000 people and interviewed 30 participants from four Canadian universities — two in British Columbia, one on the Prairies and one in Atlantic Canada.

Some students said they were the target of crude slurs.

Faculty members — mostly women — also said they've been harassed online by students or colleagues.

Cassidy said the emergence of cyberbullying in an older population comes with grown-up consequences, such as ruined professional relationships or reputations, anxiety, sleep deprivation and thoughts of suicide.

She added that the website Rate My Professors is particularly distressing for instructors.

Just over half of the surveyed students and faculty

Quoted

"Called me a 'spoiled little rich bitch,' mocked my bulimia ... messaged me multiple times telling me ... I was nothing more than 'a clingy bitch, slut and loser.' "

A student interviewed in a focus group said they tried to stop cyberbullying. But less than half of them reported success. Cassidy said that's partly because few university policies specifically address online bullying.

One of the researchers, Simon Fraser criminology professor emerita Margaret Jackson said that many of the universities seemed dubious that online harassment in higher education should be considered cyberbullying.

Senate spying. Obama backs probe of CIA: White House

The White House says President Barack Obama agrees with CIA Director John Brennan that it's important to get to the bottom of whether the spy agency violated any laws with respect to a Senate panel's investigation.

White House spokesman Jay Carney isn't taking sides between the CIA and Senate Intelligence Committee Chairwoman Dianne Feinstein, who alleges the CIA improperly accessed Senate computers.

Carney says he can't comment because there's an ongoing review by an inspector general and that the matter has also been referred to the Justice Department.

Carney also says there have been periodic disputes about the Senate panel's allegations that the CIA used torture during the Bush administration. He says Obama supports that investigation and wants its findings declassified. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Turkish teen's death fans anti-government protests

Family members cry as people carry the coffin of Berkin Elvan in Istanbul, Turkey, Tuesday. The Turkish teenager had been in a coma since being hit in the head by a tear gas canister fired by police during last summer's anti-government protests. His family said Berkin, who turned 15 in January, was on his way to a shop to buy bread when he was caught up in a street protest and struck in the head with a high-velocity gas canister. Turkish police fired tear gas, water cannons and rubber bullets at hundreds of protesters hurling stones and bottles Tuesday in central Ankara, the capital, and Istanbul, the largest city, as unrest swelled within hours of news that Elvan had died in an Istanbul hospital nine months after losing consciousness with a fractured skull. Protests were reported in at least nine other cities.

UFO reports down, still three a day

Ontario leads. Almost 1,200 alleged sightings across Canada in 2013

UFO sightings in 2013 may not have reached the hype they did in 2012, but there were still almost 1,200 sightings in Canada last year, according to a list compiled by the Winnipeg-based group Ufology Research.

In total, there were 1,180 UFO sightings in Canada, says the summary of results, the second-highest yearly number of UFO sightings in Canada in the last 25 years.

The highest was in 2012, with about 2,000 cases reported. "This was likely an anomaly due to many people who were excited about the so-called "end of the world" in 2012 according to the Mayan Calendar, and re-

Extraterrestrial?

The average UFO sighting in 2013 lasted about 13 minutes.

- Ontario had more than 40 per cent of all Canadian UFO reports.
- About 14 per cent of all UFO reports were classified as unexplained.

porting many lights and objects as UFOs," said the authors in a statement.

"The continued reporting of UFOs by the public and the overall trend of increasing yearly numbers of UFO reports suggests a need for further examination of the phenomenon by social, medical and/or physical scientists."

Trapped by cat in bedroom, family dials 911

The Oregon owners of a 22-pound house cat that trapped them in their bedroom after attacking their baby say they're not giving up on their pet and are getting it medical attention and therapy.

Two days after police arrived to subdue the 4-year-old part-Himalayan cat, owner Lee Palmer of Portland said he's taking the feline to a veterinarian. A pet psychologist also is due at the house to see the cat, named Lux.

"We're not getting rid of him right now," Palmer said. "He's been part of our family for a long time."

Palmer says the animal attacked his 7-month-old child after the baby pulled its tail. The child suffered a few scratches on the forehead.

On the 911 call, Palmer tells the dispatcher he kicked the cat "in the rear" to protect his child. Palmer says the animal then "just went off over the edge," leading Palmer and his girlfriend to barricade themselves, their baby and the family dog in the bedroom for safety.

The cat can be heard screeching in the background of the call as Palmer says in a panicked voice: "He's charging us. He's at our bedroom door." Palmer also tells the dispatcher the cat has been violent in the past.

Officers used a dog snare to capture the animal, and placed it in a crate.

The cat attack story gained attention after police put out a news release about it Monday. Palmer says people reached out wanting to adopt Lux, but the family is not taking them up on it.

Flight MH370. Hijacking, sabotage and the pilots' psychological health are being considered

The missing Boeing 777 jetliner changed course over the sea, crossed Malaysia and reached the Strait of Malacca — hundreds of miles from its last position recorded by civilian authorities, Malaysian military officials said Tuesday, citing military radar data.

The development added confusion and mystery into what is emerging as one of most puzzling aviation incidents of recent time, and it has raised questions about why the Malaysia Airlines flight apparently was not transmitting signals detectable by civilian radar or sending distress calls after it turned back.

Many experts have been working on the assumption there was a catastrophic event on the flight — such as an explosion, engine failure, terrorist attack, extreme turbulence, pilot error or even suicide. The director of the CIA said in Washington that he still would not rule out terrorism.

Flight MH370, carrying 239 people, took off from Kuala Lumpur at 12:41 a.m. Saturday, bound for Beijing. Authorities initially said its last contact with ground controllers was less than an hour into the flight at a height of 35,000 feet, when the plane was somewhere between the east coast of Malaysia and Vietnam. Venezuela protests

Mediation a possibility for Biden: Source

U.S. Vice-President Joe Biden has been discussing the "difficult situation" in Venezuela with other Latin American leaders attending Chile's presidential inauguration on Tuesday, and mentioned the possibility of mediation by third parties, according to a senior U.S. administration official.

The official, who was not authorized to speak on the record, said Biden told leaders that democracy is more than holding elections — that human rights, including the right to protest, also must be respected.

The official said Biden told them he stood by remarks this week to Chile's El Mercurio newspaper suggesting Venezuela's government is using "armed vigilantes" against peaceful protesters and accused it of "concocting false and outlandish conspiracy theories" of U.S. involvement.

Haitians sue UN over cholera outbreak

Nearly 1,500 Haitians filed a lawsuit Tuesday seeking compensation from the United Nations for victims of a cholera outbreak that health officials say has killed more than 8,000 people and sickened over 600,000 in the impoverished Caribbean nation.

Scientific studies have shown that cholera was likely introduced in Haiti by UN peacekeepers from Nepal, where the disease is endemic.

UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon rejected a previous claim for compensation for cholera victims, citing diplomatic immunity, but announced a $2.27 billion initiative to help eradicate cholera in Haiti in December 2012.

The lawsuit filed Tuesday in Brooklyn federal court seeks compensations for deaths and illnesses and funding for clean water in Haiti.

Libs to propose MPP wage freeze till 2019

'Cynical political play'
Opposition calls move a 'populist message' ahead of possible spring election

Members of the Ontario legislature won't get a pay raise before 2019 under proposed legislation that the opposition parties said Tuesday was an attempt by the Liberal government to distract from its "sorry" record ahead of a possible spring election.

The Canadian Press has learned the Liberals will introduce the bill next week to avoid an automatic pay increase for MPPs of five to six per cent that would kick in April 1.

There's little chance the bill could pass before the last legislated pay freeze expires, but government sources said the salary hike would not go through as long as the new legislation is on the order paper.

The legislation will extend the pay freeze — which was first imposed in 2009 and then renewed in 2012 — until 2019, and even then MPPs would only get a raise if the provincial budget is balanced.

The Liberals face an $11.7-billion deficit, and the sources said freezing the pay of politicians and their non-unionized political staff is the government's way of leading by example in reducing government spending.

The opposition parties, however, said the MPP wage freeze was more about distracting voters from the Liberals' poor record in government.

"They've got two police investigations on them, a whole bunch of scandals lined up behind them from eHealth to the gas plants scandals, and this is an attempt to take the attention off what is a pretty bad record on the part of this government," said NDP house leader Gilles Bisson. "They're trying to position themselves on a populist message in light of what could be an election this spring."

In numbers

MPPs are supposed to make 75 per cent of what Members of Parliament make, but have been capped at $116,500 a year for the past five years.

- Ontario cabinet ministers earn $165,850, while Premier Kathleen Wynne is paid $208,974 a year.

- A raise of up to six per cent would be due this year to maintain that ratio.

- The bill would extended a pay freeze imposed in 2009, renewed in 2012.

- MPPs got a 1.6 per cent raise in 2013-14 for the first time in three years, and have a base pay of $160,200.

- Currently $11.7 billion in the red, the provincial budget would have to be balanced for MPPs to get a pay raise, under the bill.

Pistorius fired guns in public twice, trial hears

Oscar Pistorius' friend testified Tuesday the Olympian twice fired guns in public in the six months before he killed his girlfriend, once without warning through the sunroof of a moving car following an angry altercation with a policeman who had handled Pistorius' pistol.

Darren Fresco said he asked Pistorius immediately after the sunroof shooting if he was "mad" and the world-famous runner "just laughed" at him.

Pistorius denies shooting the gun in the car, although now two witnesses say he did.

Fresco's testimony portrayed Pistorius as a reckless hothead who asked Fresco to take the blame for a gun being fired accidentally under a table in a Johannesburg restaurant.

But Fresco's account appeared to be undermined when Pistorius' defence lawyer created doubts over Fresco's recollection of some events. Fresco responded to a number of questions from Barry Roux on cross-examination by saying he didn't remember. He also said he'd been following some previous testimony in the case on Twitter, which witnesses should not do.

Oscar Pistorius, right, leaves court in Pretoria, South Africa, on Tuesday.
THEMBA HADEBE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pistorius, 27, is on trial for murder for the shooting death of girlfriend Reeva Steenkamp on Valentine's Day last year, but also faces two firearm charges for shooting in public and a third firearm charge for illegal possession of ammunition.

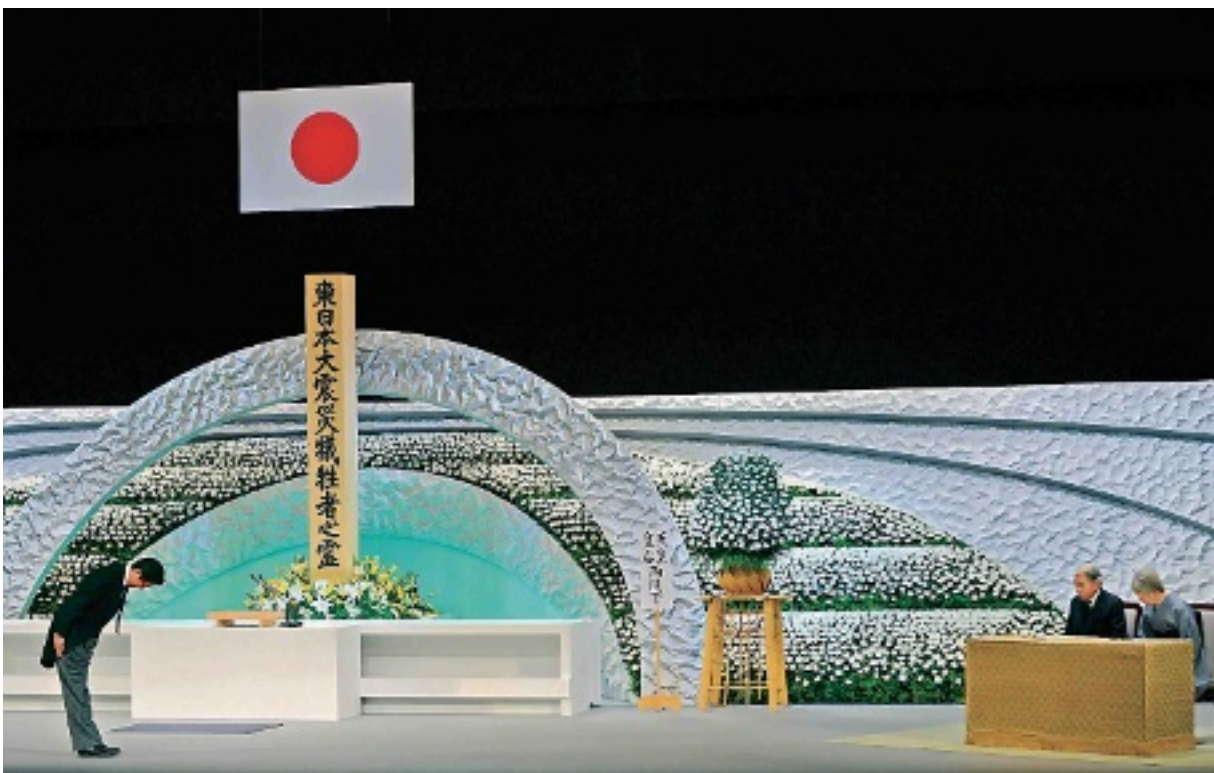

Pistorius, the first double-amputee runner to compete at the Olympics, pleaded not guilty to all four charges against him. He specifically denies that he fired the gun in the car, Roux said.

Pistorius' demeanour in court was drastically different Tuesday to the retching defendant who needed a bucket to throw up in on Monday as he heard a pathologist give graphic details of the injuries he inflicted on his girlfriend when he shot her multiple times through a toilet door in his home on Feb. 14 last year.

This time, instead of hunched over and heaving, Pistorius mostly sat with his hands in his lap in the Pretoria courtroom and often made notes. He denies murder in Steenkamp's killing, saying he shot her by mistake thinking she was a dangerous intruder.

The Biebs in court. New trial date set for May 5

A May 5 trial date was set Tuesday for Justin Bieber in the Florida case charging him with driving under the influence, resisting arrest and possessing an invalid driver's license.

Prosecutor Daniel Diaz-Balart also said at a brief hearing that no plea offer has been made for the 20-year-old pop singer, who has pleaded not guilty. Bieber's attorney, Roy Black, also said there was no plea deal on the table and none had been rejected, even though first offenders in most similar cases are offered a plea to avoid potential jail time.

"All we're going to say is, we're going to prepare for a trial and that Mr. Bieber has pleaded not guilty," Black told reporters.

The initial March trial date was postponed while attorneys for news organizations and Bieber wrestled with release of police videos of him giving a urine sample for a drug test. Those videos were made public last week with sensitive segments blacked out.

Bieber and R&B singer Khalil Amir Sharieff were arrested Jan. 23 in Miami Beach after what police called an illegal drag race with high-end sports cars. Breath tests showed Bieber's blood-alcohol content was below the 0.02 limit for underage drivers. Other tests detected marijuana and Xanax.

Israeli airstrike kills three Gaza militants

An Israeli airstrike killed three Gaza militants on Tuesday near an area where an unmanned Israeli surveillance aircraft crashed earlier in the day, an official in the Palestinian territory said. The Israeli military said it was responding to mortar fire.

The Israeli military said the Skylark drone experienced a technical malfunction and it was investigating what caused it to go down.

Israel uses drones to gather intelligence on militant activity in Gaza, a territory governed by the Palestinian Islamic militant group Hamas, and where several other armed groups also operate.

Hamas militants said they recovered the aircraft in southern Gaza and handed it over to security forces. No further details were immediately available.

The Israeli army would not say whether the drone's fall into Hamas' hands could provide secrets or technology to the militants. The Skylark, however, is known to have safeguards to prevent disclosure of information to unauthorized personnel.

Shortly after the drone crashed, the Islamic Jihad movement said an Israeli airstrike struck the area, killing three members belonging to the group.

The Israeli military said it was responding to mortar fire that had just taken place toward Israel.

Shoe-bomb plotter testifies in bin Laden's spokesman trial

A British man testifying in the terror trial of Osama bin Laden's son-in-law said Tuesday he flew on planes over the Middle East and Europe with explosives in a shoe after the Sept. 11 attacks but didn't detonate them because he was saving the bomb for an attack over America.

Saajid Badat revealed details of the plot as he testified for a second day at the New York City trial of Sulaiman Abu Ghaith, bin Laden's son-in-law and al-Qaida's spokesman after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

Badat testified he wore a shoe bomb on at least one flight from Karachi, Pakistan, to Holland and another from Holland to Great Britain in December 2001, choosing not to detonate it because he wanted to use it for an attack against an American aircraft.

Prosecutors are using the 34-year-old Badat's testimony to show Abu Ghaith played a pivotal role with al-Qaida when he warned Americans "the storm of aircrafts will not stop" on videotapes widely distributed after the Sept. 11 attacks. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Critch's corner

Newfoundland native Mark Critch believes negative perceptions of East Coasters are becoming a thing of the past. JEFF HARPER/METRO IN HALIFAX

It's outdated: 22 Minutes' Mark Critch on the East Coast typecast

Atlantic Canada is known for its funny folk.

From Rick Mercer to Cathy Jones, East Coast comics seem second-to-none in bringing Canadians to gales and guffaws.

But when it comes to the Atlantic Canadian stereotype, 22 Minutes veteran funnyman and St. John's, N.L., native Mark Critch gets serious.

Metro News caught up with the comedian in Halifax to hear his thoughts on pigeonholing Atlantic Canadians and whether the East Coast label is changing.

Describe a stereotypical Atlantic Canadian.

I guess a bit of a drinker. Working the system to get a cheque. Happy-go-lucky.

Are they/we crazy? Or is there some merit to these stereotypes?

I don't think so. Anyone who has met a farmer, fisherman or plant worker would know they are hard workers. Seasonal work doesn't mean lazy. Most people who depend on EI to supplement income work a lot harder and longer than the politicians who send out the EI PIs (Employment Insurance Private Investigators).

You're looking at a stereotypical Atlantic Canadian — what do you see?

The "Newfie joke" used to be the guy in the sou'wester, pipe in hand, nodding and winking. I think these days more people think of Rick Mercer or Rex Murphy or Danny Williams when they think of Newfoundland. It's outdated.

How do you think people elsewhere in the country think of you?

Everywhere I go I hear people talking about the job opportunities in oil and gas, the scenery, the music scene, etc. I think a lot of Canadians want to come here and are envious of a place that has such a healthy cultural identity.

It seems like most of the negative East Coast stereotypes come from East Coasters themselves — are we a self-deprecating bunch? Is it all in our heads?

I disagree. When East Coasters went to the big city to find work in the '50s, '60s and '70s, they were mocked and made fun of because they spoke differently. They weren't as "hip." One of the reasons we have so many comedians is that we quickly learned a sharp wit was handy in these situations. The new generation is proud of who they are and where they are from. And so they should be. I don't hear those jokes anymore when I travel. Used to be the first thing someone in Toronto would do was tell you a Newfie joke. Now they say, "I love Hey Rosetta."

GEORDON OMAND/FOR METRO IN HALIFAX

WHO IS AN EAST

Know the East Coast, from least to most.

Drinking, smoking, living on lobster and welfare — is this how the rest of Canada sees the East?

RUTH DAVENPORT
Metro in Halifax

In a country the size of Canada, stereotypes are hard to avoid. They're a shortcut to identity, an easy way of distinguishing people in one place from another. British Columbians are left-wing pot-smoking radicals, Albertans are ultra-conservative cowboys and Ontarians believe they're the centre of the universe.

Then there's Atlantic Canada, to most Canadians the home of friendly, roughspun fisherfolk scratching out a living in quaint villages scattered across the lovely expanse of land between Montreal and the ocean.

"I find that they're often envious about when I talk about my visits home, going to the ocean, just the natural beauty and landscape of the Maritimes," said Windsor Junction, N.S., resident Sarah Harper, now living in London, Ont. "They have that postcard image of Peggy's Cove, and that's what the Maritimes is."

It sounds benign — better than being a cowboy, anyway — but experts say there's some unflattering baggage lurking behind that romanticized caricature.

"Packaged in with the stereotype of the fisher is precarious employment, ruralness, hard living, underdevelopment," said Howard Ramos, a professor of sociology and Canadian studies at Halifax's Dalhousie University.

"Those are some of the same things that contribute to stereotypes around drinking, smoking, etc. And they also

Fact, fiction and the grey areas

Stereotypes are a blend of fact and distortions of fact: To wit, the fishing industry is Atlantic Canada's largest single private employer, but actual fishermen represent only a small percentage of the total population.

Most Atlantic Canadian stereotypes are rooted, in some form, in the region's post-Confederation history as "have not." Social indicators of poverty, such as smoking, alcohol abuse and obesity rates, are highest in the Atlantic provinces, reinforcing perceptions of the region as economically depressed — and insignificant.

"Even when the (groundfish) fishery closed, the rest of Canada didn't seem to have a visceral reaction," said Howard Ramos, referring to the 1990s collapse of cod and groundfish stocks, which sustained the livelihoods of thousands of fishers and processors in the plant workers. "It was overshadowed by the Quebec referendum, the low Canadian dollar... When you think that four provinces of the country were affected, that's a surprising lack of concern."

Perhaps the best-known example of an Atlantic Canada brush-off is Prime Minister Stephen Harper's observation in 2006 that the region suffered from a "culture of defeat."

"It's ... taking a very complex set of circumstances, psychologically, culturally, attitudinally, and then making a relatively far-reaching stereotypical comment," said

Will the image of plaid-clad fisherfolk follow East Coasters for generations to come?

COASTER?

Fascinating ignorance?

"I think there's a fascination with East Coast culture, the romanticization ... yet a failure to actually get even one step below that facade to get to know the names of our provinces, for example."

Megan Leslie
Halifax MP

Ray Ivany, president of Acadia University and chair of a panel that released a recent sweeping report on Nova Scotia's economic prospects.

Ivany spent 14 months in research and public consultation for the panel's report, and said Nova Scotians definitely suffer from some cultural "fault lines" — but shouldn't let those become the grounds for being overlooked.

"You'd never let somebody else, who barely knows you, declaratively make a statement that defined you," he said. "So why should we allow it as a province or a region?"

The interplay of politics and identity

Stereotypes make great punchlines, but they have real-world implications that are no laughing matter. Halifax MP Megan Leslie says she and her Atlantic counterparts tend to tread carefully around certain issues because of the possibility of reinforcing negative stereotypes.

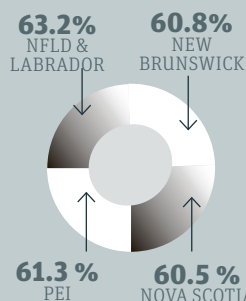

"Sometimes we're shy about, well, do we really want to go out on this EI thing again," she said. "Because while it is an important issue for us in Atlantic Canada, maybe we are painting ourselves as the poor Atlantic cousins."

Ramos says basic fairness is another reason to confront stereotypes, noting Canada can't dismiss the Atlantic region as the poor cousin while benefiting from its workers and exports.

central Canada wants to eat the lobsters, and have the Christmas trees and have the offshore oil and the mineral resources in Labrador, it means this region has to have an infrastructure investment in it from central Canada as well," he said.

Changing the Atlantic Canada stereotype could also have a potential impact on the region's economic future. Ivany's report highlighted a need in Nova Scotia to change negative attitudes towards entrepreneurial success and outsiders to encourage and promote growth.

Although the deeply entrenched suspicion towards "come from aways" may be understandable, given a long history of being governed and managed by absentee and often exploitative entities, Ivany said it's time to start being more welcoming — not just "friendly" — to immigrants who come to Atlantic Canada in search of a home.

"The challenge now is to recognize that we've got to be much more welcoming, much more supportive of people from around the world who want to come here and frankly we need to be part of our province," he said.

Ultimately, Harper — the Windsor Junction resident living in Ontario — says Atlantic Canadians need to stop beating up on themselves.

"I don't want to say ... there's a bit of an inferiority complex, but I really think there is," she said. "Have a little bit of pride that I think most of the rest of the country is pretty envious."

2) Courteous, social and can't drive.

Proud Maritimer... salt of the earth. Our look is diverse.

3) Probably clinically depressed & unemployed

Definitely laid back... less stress here.

4) White, middle-aged, redneck, blue-collared, slightly overweight, uninformed, boring, no appreciation of the arts, alcoholic... full of complaints but no solutions, & completely out of touch with younger generations.

Easy going people, a little behind the times in fashion and trends

5) Friendliest people on the planet.

6) No young ones. They're all out west.

Wear it with pride

The sou'wester hat trick

There are few Canadian symbols more iconically East Coast than the sou'wester.

The collapsible rain hat — traditionally an oilskin — extends longer in the back to protect the neck from rain and often features a flipped-up front brim gutter for added rain protection.

But few might be aware of the process and protocol involved in donning the yellow bonnet.

Follow these four sacrosanct steps — endorsed by the apocryphal Angus Sou'Wester — and you too can wear the oilskin with East Coast pride:

- Place sou'wester on head, ensuring that the short brim faces the bow with the long brim pointing towards your stern.
- Take pure salt water from the Atlantic Ocean and anoint sou'wester with care.
- Pour one full ounce of black rum or a reasonable facsimile.
- Place left hand over heart and, facing the Atlantic Ocean, down rum in one gulp.

George Jetson had his flying car, Sergey Brin has his driverless car

Soon you'll have one, too. With self-driving cars already being tested, officials are busy deciding on the new rules of the road

Sooner or later, consumers will be able to buy cars that rely on computers — not the owner — to do the driving.

With that in mind, the California Department of Motor Vehicles held an initial public hearing Tuesday as it puzzles through how to regulate the public's use of the technology that is still being tested.

Among the complex questions officials wanted to unravel:

How will the state know the cars are safe?

Does a driver even need to

While he is clearly no George Jetson, Google co-founder Sergey Brin seems pleased after riding in a driverless car with California Gov. Jerry Brown, far left, and state Senator Alex Padilla, second from left, to a bill signing for driverless cars at Google headquarters in Mountain View, Calif., in 2012. be behind the wheel?

Can manufacturers mine data from on board computers to make product pitches based on where the car goes or set insurance rates on how it is driven?

Once the stuff of science fiction, driverless cars could be commercially available by decade's end. Before then, the DMV wants to decide how to integrate the cars — often called autonomous vehicles — onto public roads.

Three other states have passed driverless car laws, but those rules mostly focus on testing.

Setting the standards

California's legislature passed a law in 2012 that mandated rules on testing and public operation, and the DMV expects within weeks to finalize regulations dictating what companies must do to test the technology on public roads.

- Those rules came after Google Inc. already had sent its fleet of Priuses and Lexuses, fitted with an array of sensors including radar and lasers, hundreds of thousands of miles in California.

Take that, polar vortex. Top U.S. airlines flying high despite rough winter

U.S. airlines are still tallying up the damage from this winter's storms, but solid demand for travel means they are likely to weather the rocky start to 2014 in good shape.

Reports from some of the airlines point to higher average prices, and executives say spring bookings look strong.

This has been the worst winter for flight cancellations since the government started keeping track more than 25 years ago. The top four airline companies by miles flown — American, which includes US Airways; United; Delta; and Southwest — have cancelled nearly 75,000 flights this year. Snow and ice storms have fouled schedules at big airports in Chicago, Atlanta, the New York City area and elsewhere.

Since Jan. 1, Delta Air Lines Inc. has cancelled 17,000 flights. In weaker times for the industry, that might have been devastating, said Ed Bastian, the airline's president. Those cancellations will cut revenue by $90 million US and pretax earnings by $55 million US, but Delta still expects to post a record profit for the first quarter, usually the weakest season for airlines, he said.

MUSTN'T FORGET THAT UFO INVASION

With all the talk about the zombie apocalypse these days, you don't hear much about UFOs. It's as if they've just vanished from the sky.

Well, you'll be pleased to hear that's not the case.

In fact, here in Canada, the number of UFO sightings has never been higher. They haven't gone away. It's just that nobody cares anymore. We have zombies — and a few leftover sparkling vampires — to worry about.

Despite the shift in phantom phashion, Chris Rutkowski, chief researcher at Ufology Research (formerly Ufology Research of Manitoba, in case you were wondering) keeps grinding out the annual UFO survey.

As you might expect, 2012, the year of the Mayan apocalypse that didn't happen (it's hard keeping all these apocalypses straight), was a record year for UFO sightings. For some reason the Maya, who are Mesoamerican indigenous persons, and UFOs, piloted by Romulan indigenous persons, are often linked.

JUST SAYIN'
Paul Sullivan

Anyway, there were 1,981 sightings in 2012, but 2013 was no slouch for sightings either, according to the latest report, fresh from the twilight zone. There were 1,180 UFO sightings reported in Canada in 2013, about three a day.

A triumphant note has a tendency to creep into Rutkowski's otherwise commendable attempt to stay on an even keel. "UFOs have not gone away. This data clearly contradicts comments by those who would assert that UFOs are a 'passing fad' or that UFO sightings are decreasing."

That "passing fad" guy? That would be me.

To his credit, Rutkowski keeps an open mind about what people are seeing. Most cases are, um, nocturnal lights (631). But daylight discs are creeping up (145). You'll also be pleased to know that there are still a few good-old-fashioned close encounters of a third kind, in which actual Romulans are encountered (the more scientifically rigorous Rutkowski calls them "entities"). There are even three close encounters of a fourth kind, "an alleged 'abduction' or 'contact' experience." I'll bet.

Most intriguing, a full 14 per cent of all 2013 UFO reports are classified as unexplained. The truth may or may not be out there.

Rutkowski is ready to concede that a failure to recognize conventional or natural objects may be the underlying reason for some of these sightings, but he doesn't rule out the possibility that more secret or classified military exercises are underway — or maybe there's just an increase in Amazon drone test flights.

On the other hand, maybe more nutbars (my word) with an inclination to share have access to the Internet. My favourite possible reason: The downturn in the economy is "leading to an increased desire by some people to look skyward for assistance."

Cosmic panhandling. It's a growing problem.

On March 12, 1989, Tim Berners-Lee presented a paper at the CERN lab in Switzerland, outlining his vision for sharing files between computers. Twenty-five years later, that vision is now woven into our everyday lives in the form of the World Wide Web. So, on the occasion of the web's 25th birthday, here are a few ways to celebrate:

The Internet Archive (archive.org/web):

Known as the WayBack Machine, this archive of more than 398 billion web pages offers you a sizable glimpse into the web's past. It's kind of like looking at the web's baby photos.

The first website:

Although Berners-Lee had conceived of the web back in 1989, it took him until 1993 to launch the first website. It's still online, and available at info.cern.ch.

The gift of cash:

Berners-Lee could have gotten rich by patenting the technology behind the web, but instead chose to give it to the world as a free resource. So today, why not donate to some of the organizations fighting to keep the web free and open, like OpenMedia.ca or the Electronic Frontier Foundation \(eff.org\).

Another case of hotel as grand old backdrop of frolic and folly

Lobby for fun. Wes Anderson latest director to resort to hotel as centre of action

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

"Grand Hotel... always the same. People come, people go. Nothing ever happens."

That famous line from the Greta Garbo film Grand Hotel is only half right. Hundreds of movies have used hotels as a backdrop for the action because people come, people go, but despite the quote's assertion, there's always something happening.

This weekend's The Grand Budapest Hotel is a case in point. Starring Ralph Fiennes as a concierge at a European hotel between the world wars, it features an all-star cast, including Bill Murray, Owen Wilson, Harvey Keitel and Edward Norton. They are all part of the fabric of the hotel's history, which includes assassins, murder, riches and a mysterious painting.

Hollywood has always recognized that the transient nature of hotels makes for great drama.

New York City's Plaza Hotel has played host to many famous movie scenes. Everything from Barefoot in the Park to Funny Girl to The Great Gatsby has used the iconic hotel as a backdrop, but it is probably best known as a location for North by Northwest. In the Alfred Hitchcock film, Roger O. Thornhill (Cary Grant) is mistaken for a government agent and kidnapped from the ornate lobby.

The opening shot of Goldfinger features a stunning aerial view of Miami's Fontainebleau Hotel, which at the time was the most luxurious guesthouse on Miami Beach. Later in the film, Bond girl Jill Masterson (Shirley Eaton) dies of skin asphyxiation inside the hotel after henchman Oddjob (Harold Sakata) coats her whole body in gold paint.

In the 1920s the Hotel del Coronado was a famous weekend getaway for Hollywood stars like Mae West, Charlie Chaplin, Clark Gable and Errol Flynn, but the Victorian wooden beach resort found fame as the setting for several scenes in Some Like It Hot. Located on San Diego Bay across from San Diego, the beachfront location was the scene of one of the film's most famous lines. When Jerry (Jack Lemmon) first spies Sugar Kane (Marilyn Monroe) sashaying through the sand, he says, "Look how she moves! It's like Jell-O on springs."

Stephen King was inspired to write The Shining after staying at the 140-room Stanley Hotel in Colorado. "I think a lot of things happened right here in this particular hotel over the years," says Dick Hallorann (Scatman Crothers) in the film version. "And not all of 'em was good."

The Stanley has been used as a location for Dumb and Dumber and other films, but Stanley Kubrick chose not to showcase the place in his 1980 adaptation of the novel. Instead, much to King's disappointment, he used Oregon's Timberline Lodge as a stand-in for the film's fictional Overlook Hotel.

True Detective demand crashes HBO Go

Woody Harrelson, left, and Matthew McConaughey in HBO's True Detective. JIM BRIDGES/HBO/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

If you're one of those who have no idea how True Detective ended Sunday night — whether or not Matthew McConaughey and Woody Harrelson located the Yellow King — you're not alone. Last night so many people were trying to log onto the on-demand service HBO Go that the site crashed. Left with nothing to fill their life with, they were forced to mobilize the old fashioned way: By complaining on Twitter and hoping some journo screen-grabs them.

Does this mean a seismic shift in HBO Go's rules? Currently they're shockingly lax, given that they're a major conglomerate who can do a show with a famous actor destined for his first Oscar. If you have an HBO Go subscription, you can share it with up to five others, and their usage will not interfere with your own. Predictably, many have done just that, and the no doubt many duplicate accounts no doubt led to a serious clog.

But don't freak and order your own pricy HBO subscription. No less than HBO CEO Richard Plepler has said as recently as January that he's cool with the code sharing. "It's not that we aren't mindful of it, but it has no real effect on our business," he crowed during a BuzzFeed event. He looks at it as marketing, allowing the content to spread more easily. After all, to get HBO Go you have to become an HBO subscriber. Of course, at this point, how many of you are still cable subscribers?

The Husband a triangle with an edge

Interview. Dark story is about reclaiming masculinity, director Bruce McDonald says

scene@metronews.ca

The Husband begins with a premise we've all heard before, a romantic triangle. There's a husband, a wife and a lover but, as director Bruce McDonald points out, "in this case the lover is fourteen years old and the wife is in jail."

The movie is a dark dramedy about Henry, (Maxwell McCabe-Lokos, who also co-wrote the script), struggling to deal with the shame he feels when his wife is jailed for having an affair with a minor.

"The script really tries to understand what the male goes through in this crazy situation," says McDonald. "It's about regaining your mojo, about reclaiming your masculinity and power and it was written as a suspense story. There was this 'What's this guy going to do' thing all the way along. It was set up as a revenge movie. We meet our character and he is going through his day-to-day and one day, on the street, he sees the kid. The kid that did the deed. That sets off the movie, so it's this cat and mouse game throughout the whole movie. I just loved the way it was constructed and the suspense of it. What is our character Henry going to do when he finally confronts the kid?"

"He begins to do irrational things. First he's trying to befriend this kid and get on his good side. To do what? And then other elements come into play where he is preparing something that you might think is a violent end to this confrontation. Henry

ald admits to being "very surprised at the reaction."

"People were very taken with this movie," he says. "They went in deep. I think they loved the oddness and the suspense of the story. They loved the situation and I think they loved how authentic and true it seemed to be in terms of the performances by Maxwell and Sarah Allen.

"Usually at the festival there's two or three screenings. In this case the screening venues kept getting bigger and bigger which is always a bit frightening because the first screening is usually well attended and by the third you're not quite sure what's going to happen but our third screening was packed to the rafters."

Amanda Bynes denies secret Twitter account

Amanda Bynes has been behaving herself since returning to Twitter earlier this month — officially, at least.

According to In Touch, the troubled former child star has been using a secret second Twitter account to be her old self again, mocking familiar targets like Rihanna and Courtney Love and obsessing over her dog and going to the gym under the pseudonym Ashley Barks. "If this isn't Amanda Bynes' private Twitter account, then someone is doing a very good job of impersonating her," a social media expert tells the magazine.

But Bynes herself says the story is bogus, taking to her official Twitter account to write, "FYI This is my only twitter account, I have no secret twitter accounts."

Captain America sick of partying — except with his fellow superheroes

Captain America star Chris Evans is looking to settle down and put the partying to rest, according to Glamour U.K.

"In your 20s you think, 'How will I ever not like going out?' You have drinks, buddies, music — great," Evans tells the magazine. "But in the last two or three years, I go to a club and I kind of wish I was home. My idea of a good time has evolved a bit, so a night out with me might not be as exciting as it might have been a couple of years ago."

He does make an exception, though for his Avengers co-stars, including Robert Downey Jr., Mark Ruffalo, Scarlett Johansson and Chris Hemsworth.

Perfect pubs for Paddy's Day

Raise your pint glass.

It can be tough to find an authentic Irish watering hole on this side of the Atlantic; here are five suggestions

life@metronews.ca

There's no shortage of bars across the country claiming to be Irish, but only a precious few can say their roots are tied to the Emerald Isle. If you're particular about celebrating St. Patrick's Day in true Irish tradition, here are five of Canada's most authentic pubs.

Durty Nelly's (Halifax)

Named after a famous Irish landmark, Durty Nelly's is credible enough to boast that its interior was actually designed and constructed in Dublin before crossing the Atlantic to be rebuilt in downtown Halifax. Toss in seafood chowder that has even been praised by the L.A. Times and this pub is certainly worth its Celtic salt.

Irish Specialties: Guinness Lamb Shank ($19), Seafood Chowder ($12.50)

P.J. O'Brien (Toronto)

Opened by well-known Cloone-born businessman Pat Quinn, P.J. O'Brien features a classic copper-topped bar, authentic Irish cuisine, white-jacketed bartenders and plenty of hospitality. Although the always-friendly proprietor passed away in 2009, his gregarious legacy lives on through his son.

The Irish Heather in Vancouver is modelled after modern Irish gastropubs. IRISH HEATHER

Don't be surprised if Pat Quinn Jr. even comes over and buys you a round.

Irish Specialties: Beef and Guinness Stew ($15), Kilkeny Ale Fish & Chips ($15)

O'Hanlon's (Regina)

Surprisingly, the reigning champ for selling the most Guinness pints in Canada is located in Regina. Run by Limerick native Niall O'Hanlon, the eponymous pub sold 61 kegs of the popular stout last St. Patrick's Day and aims to defend the title. O'Hanlon's is primarily an alehouse, but attracts a diverse clientele.

Irish Specialties: Corned Beef and Cabbage ($15), Shepherd's Pie ($14)

James Joyce (Calgary)

Located amongst Calgary's skyscraper-lined downtown, James Joyce was opened by Irish immigrants Anne and Gerard Curran to bring Gaelic ambience to the Stampede City. Highlighted by traditional Celtic music and decorated with scores of artifacts and heirlooms ranging from schoolbooks to a penny-farthing bicycle, this dark, inviting pub will make you feel like you've been transplanted to the middle of the Emerald Isle.

Irish Specialties: Irish Potato Boxty ($13), Ballycastle Bacon Bites ($11)

Irish Heather (Vancouver)

For a slightly bit more contemporary "craic" experi-

The evil eye refers to bad energy transmitted by a person who has negative and covetous thoughts. Victims, from humans to horses, are said to suffer from headaches, nausea or impotence. While locals believe the blessings from church officials or remedies administered from a learned elder can cure them, interlopers may find the purchase of a preventative charm to

Do you have a messy desk? Are you missing important items, and suspect they're somewhere in the stacks of paper that have mysteriously accumulated?

Perhaps you're also unhappy with the boring office walls surrounding you, or the lack of storage space.

These things matter, because having an unorganized office space can make you less interested in your work. So break out that office dust buster and get tidying.

Get rid of whatever you no longer actually use or need, because those things are only taking up space that could be better put to use.

You will likely find that you have old items lying around that you don't even remember acquiring. Items that you don't use on a daily basis can be stored in drawers or cupboards to help de-clutter your desk.

Avoid having duplicates of anything that could more conveniently be stored on your computer. Keep a recycling bin under your desk to easily discard useless extra paper copies that can later be used as scrap paper. A cool trick is to snap a quick picture of your office

Having a daily routine can help you get regular tasks out of the way before they accumulate each morning. This lets you get to work on other things — meaning you won't have multiple projects on the go at once.

Establish a morning routine that includes answering all your emails and calls and checking your to-do list. Once this is out of the way, you'll be better prepared for the rest of your working day and have fewer interruptions.

Try and restrict your workspace to having one or two projects on the go, at most.

Get organized

Less is rarely more when it comes to getting organized. There's a whole world of storage units and items (big and small) out there. Grab a measuring tape and start searching.

Let's get personal

Invest in some decor to bring a little character to your office space.

- You can also decorate your place with photos of family or loved ones or even a recent company event that will help keep you motivated.
- Don't have any pictures handy? A great and simple idea is to hang your favourite inspirational quote on the wall.

fice, ensure that you give yourself five to 10 minutes to sort things out and do a little tidying. Start with the digital stuff: clean up your inbox, file everything, update your to-do list and schedule reminders.

Then turn your attention to the workspace itself. Put away completed projects and organize ongoing ones so you'll be able to pick up where you left off.

If your workplace has a clean desk policy, allocate drawer or storage space to store incomplete tasks so you don't lose track of what you were doing.

Lastly, make sure all small objects and tools are put away. The next work morning will be much easier when you have a clean clutter-free space to work with.

Tackling to-dos with a scratch-off strategy

Live and let list. There are tools out there that will help upgrade your everyday list to a fully functioning task tackler

SIDNEYVE MATRIX
TalentEgg.ca

We all make lists, and some of us far are better at using them than others.

They're the quintessential stay-on-track productivity tool, in both their low- and high-tech versions: from reminders scrawled on your hand or a flurry of Post-it to-dos, to the hundreds of apps available for your desktop and smartphone.

Part of most people's everyday quest to stay on top of tasks and to remember tidbits of information, the lowly list is your best friend on a busy day and your worst frenemy when it gets totally out of control and you've run out of that most precious commodity: time.

One thing is for sure, if you're job searching, you have plenty of plans on your plate.

Especially if while looking for your next position, you're currently employed, balancing childcare and work, or handling a full-time course load.

In those cases, mastering the art of the list matters, if it means increasing your productivity, feeling more focused, and reaching your goals faster.

So how to create smart task lists that really, really work?

Automate them

Try IFTTT.com (if-this-then-that) to create and manage tasks and reminders.

IFTTT on your smartphone helps you save time and accomplish more.

It can automatically take any emails labeled "to do" and add them to an iOS Reminders list, or copy "starred" Gmails to a Google Calendar task list.

It can also get your phone to check the weather and remind you to grab an umbrella, and autodisplay your daily to-dos the second you set out on the morning commute.

Leveraging Facebook, Twitter, Foursquare and dozens of other popular social apps to keep you on track and on task, IFTTT lets you connect the dots between, and cross off or cross-reference items from all the nodes in your digital life.

"Daypart" them

In broadcast journalism, programming is "dayparted," because while certain shows work better in the morning, other types resonate with audiences in the evening.

Take a close look at your schedule and see if it syncs with what you know about yourself.

Morning person? Get your second wind after mid-day coffee? Most focused in the wee hours?

Face your most demanding tasks during high-energy, peak-performance parts of your day, and align the low-stakes, repetitive tasks for the other parts.

Track them

There's always more to do, but the satisfaction of scratching something off your list is real.

Tracking your completed tasks may motivate and encourage you to get even more done.

The Todoist app visualizes your accomplishments, so you can immediately see just how far you've progressed toward a goal.

Likewise, there are plenty of apps that use your smartphone to record time-on-task, especially handy for tracking billable hours, and allowing you to document, then sit back and reflect on what you've accomplished to date.

A custom fit

Of course at the end of the day, productivity is deeply personal — one tool or list-making strategy will work better for you than the next.

- The bottom line? When you have multiple deadlines, projects, and people competing for your time and attention, and not a minute to spare, don't let yourself feel immobilized and overwhelmed about everything.
- Instead, tame your to-dos with a smart list that reflects your individual work style and professional priorities. Now you're ready to get the job done.

Work without walls? It's a remote possibility

Out with the office. If you're going to be on the go with your work flow, make sure the boss knows you're on the ball

DAN

Metro World News

If you aren't a remote worker right now, chances are you could be in the future. A new study by the work lifestyle company Flex+Strategy Group and Quest Diagnostics found that 31 per cent of full-time employees in the U.S. (about eight million people) do most of their work from a location other than their employer's site. Though many workers romanticize about working from home, it's much harder than it seems.

I spent four years working remotely and ended up renting office space because my situation was getting in the way of real human interaction. They don't teach you in college how to work remotely or manage remote workers, but it's an important skill in the 21st century.

I spoke with Cali Williams Yost, founder of Flex+Strategy Group, to get her tips for remote workers.

balance your work and life because you aren't clocked in. It's up to you to set time aside to do personal things that matter to you.

"Make it part of your routine to sit down for 20 minutes each week and review what you need to get done and want to get done on the job, with your career and in your personal life," Yost recommends.

Identify actions and priorities

As a remote worker, you need to take the initiative to manage yourself instead of relying on your boss to do it for you. "Identify the small, meaningful actions and priorities that will help you be your best, at work and in your personal life, for the next seven days, whether it's completing an important project, getting enough sleep or eating healthy meals," Yost suggests.

Show that mug!

Face-time is still the best way to build relationships with the people you work with.

- "Make it a point to go into your employer's workplace regularly," says Yost. Nothing will replace in-person visits where people can get to know you on a personal level.

Give regular status updates

One of the biggest concerns managers have with remote workers is that they might be distracted. Your manager will trust you if you make sure he or she is aware that you are constantly doing work and exceeding expectations. "Every week send your manager a quick 'highlights' list of accomplishments," says Yost.

Ingredients

- 1/2 cup (125 ml) whole wheat couscous
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- 1/2 tsp (2 ml) dried thyme leaves or Italian herb seasoning
- 3/4 cup (175 ml) sodium reduced vegetable or chicken broth
- 1/4 cup (60 ml) each grated carrot and zucchini or diced bell pepper
- 3 hard cooked eggs, peeled
- 1/3 cup (75 ml) 0% fat plain Greek yogurt
- 1/2 cup (125 ml) quartered grape tomatoes or chopped tomatoes
- 1/4 cup (60 ml) crumbled light feta cheese

Stars players rush to their bench to aid teammate Rich Peverley on Monday night in Dallas. Peverley suffered what GM Jim Nill called a "cardiac event" and was transported to the hospital after play was suspended. SHARON ELLMAN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NHL emergency protocol heralded

Rich Peverley. Dallas Star went into a 'cardiac event' during Monday's game and transported to hospital

From the time Rich Peverley collapsed on the bench to the time he was taken to the hospital, NHL protocols for medical emergencies were followed exactly how they were supposed to, and it might have saved the Dallas Stars forward's life.

Similar heart failures

- Jiri Fischer of the Detroit Red Wings went into cardiac arrest in 2005 but quick medical care saved him.
- Sergei Zholtok died of a heart ailment while playing in his Latvia in 2004

- New York Rangers prospect Alexei Cherepanov died of heart failure during a 2008 KHL game.

Peverley, who has missed games this season because of an irregular heartbeat, had what general manager Jim Nill called a "cardiac event" during Monday night's game against the Columbus Blue Jackets. Play was stopped immediately, and Peverley was taken down the tunnel and attended to before being transported to hospital.

The league's emergency medical standards were in place at American Airlines Center, as they are in every NHL rink.

That includes having at least two team doctors in attendance and at least one within 50 feet (15 metres) of the bench.

The incident is not likely to lead to dramatic changes in the way NHL teams deal with emergency medical situations because they worked so well.

The current guidelines are spelled out in four pages of specific detail, including the availability of triage facilities, physicians, trainers and ambulances. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Paralympics roundup. Canada's perfect sledge hockey record stays intact; Arendz battles for bronze in biathlon

Greg Westlake scored the game's only goal while Corbin Watson made seven saves for his second straight shutout Tuesday as Canada defeated the Czech Republic 1-0 in sledge hockey at the Sochi Paralympics.

Westlake broke the scoreless tie at 7:33 of the second period, ripping a shot upstairs from in tight for his second goal of the tournament.

Canada had a number of chances to extend the lead but was forced to hang on late as the Czechs made one final push in the dying seconds.

"They're a big team. They're physical," said Westlake. "They've got a lot of men on their team."

Canada has surrendered just one goal on 18 shots through three round-robin victories while outscoring its opponents 15-1.

"It was a fun game to play and it was a necessary game to play because we get better and we needed a team to push us going into the medal round," said Westlake.

Canada clinched first place in its pool and will take on the United States in one of Thursday's semifinals.

The Americans, who won gold four years ago in Vancouver, dropped a hard-fought 2-1 decision to the host Russians earlier Tuesday to finish second in their group.

Russia will meet Norway in the other semifinal.

Elsewhere on Tuesday, biathlete Mark Arendz battled pouring rain and dense fog to win a bronze medal in the men's 12.5-kilometre standing category.

He finished in 30 minutes 31 seconds. Russia's Azat Karachurin won gold in 29:30.0 while Norway's Nils-Erik Ulset captured silver.

"To get a medal is awesome and that was the goal," said Arendz.

Arendz's medal was Canada's seventh so far in the competition (one gold, two silver, four bronze).

Host Russia continues to lead with a whopping 34 medals, 23 ahead of second-place Ukraine. Canada and the United States are tied in third.

said the poor visibility made the race extra challenging.

In para-alpine skiing, Braydon Luscombe of Duncan, B.C., was the top-placing Canadian, finishing second in the standing division with a time of 52.17 seconds. Josh Dueck of Kimberley, B.C., placed fifth in the sitting category in 59.93 seconds.

Standing athlete Kirk Schornstein of Spruce Grove, Alta., was 17th and Mac Marcoux of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., and guide Robin Femy of Mont-Tremblant, Que., did not finish their run in the visually impaired category.

In the women's slalom, standing skier Calgary's Alexandra Starker was the top-placing Canadian in 1:06.59. Toronto's Erin Latimer was eighth.

In wheelchair curling, Canada improved to 5-1 and moved into a first-place tie with Russia with an 8-5 victory over China.

Sochi 2014

A shocking invention for sit-skiers

Even though he won't be racing down the slopes of Rosa Khutor, Joe Franklin is one of the most important members of Canada's para-alpine team.

The squad's technician has spent the last four years perfecting a sit-ski sled that maximizes both performance and safety, and after a lot of trial and error, the project appears to be on the right track at the Sochi Paralympics.

"This is a new sport. We're kind of figuring it out as we go," said Franklin. "There is a lot of leeway."

A sit-ski is a sled used by athletes with limited or no mobility in their legs. What Franklin has done is trade the usual all-terrain vehicle shocks for mountain bike shocks by using a lever system, while at the same time switching to a tube design to make the sleds lighter and more adaptable.

Canadian sit-skier Kimberly Joines, who was involved in a crash last year in Sochi that sent her to hospital is pleased with the safety of the new sled.

"It was a struggle in the early years," she said. "I definitely wasn't liking it that much back then. But since Joe has come on board we've just ramped up. I feel like a lot of my injuries actually were the result of equipment failures along the way."

Officials with the Saginaw Spirit say Michigan State Police have told them that the body of missing junior hockey player Terry Trafford has been found.

A man's body was found Tuesday afternoon in an SUV matching the description of one belonging to Trafford in the parking lot of a Walmart store in Saginaw Township.

Trafford reportedly last was seen about 9:30 a.m. on March 3 at the Dow Event Center, the home arena for the Spirit.

In a statement on the On-

Saginaw Spirit president Craig Goslin had said Trafford was sent home prior to his disappearance "for a vio-

At one point in the search, police said they believed Trafford might have left the state to return to his hometown of Toronto.

The improved CVT helps bump fuel economy to 7.9 l/100 km in the city and 6.0 on the highway (8.2/6.2 for AWD models), compared to 9.0/7.0 for previous Rogues (9.6/7.7 for AWD).

Engine

Visually, the Tennessee-built Rogue swaps out its Murano-like egg-carton grille for one that's a whole lot bolder. It's part of a new front end with added folds and creases for the hood and fenders, an enlarged lower air intake and fancy jewel-like headlight pods ringed with standard LED (Light Emitting Diode) running lights.

Review. Quality weather versatility, good value and NASA-inspired seats will win you over

wheelbasemedia.com

It's cold out here. Like, -20 C, with blowing snow and darkening skies in the heart of Quebec's Laurentian mountains just north of Montreal. And here we are, sampling Nissan's 2014 Rogue compact wagon.

The second-generation Rogue follows a pattern established by the original 2008 model-year version. Although a Nissan success story, the Rogue is kept at bay by the league-leading Honda CR-V, Ford Escape, Toyota RAV4 and Chevrolet Equinox. For 2014, the Rogue has upped its game with more distinctive styling, more comfortable and practical seating arrangements and improved fuel economy. They constitute basic motherhood issues for this segment that absolutely factor into the purchasing-decision process.

At the opposite end, the rear window and side glass are squared-off and the taillights are enlarged and repositioned above the fender line for improved style and visibility.

What isn't visible is the Rogue's all-new platform that's developed with Nissan's cross-ownership partner Renault. The Rogue's dimensions actually vary little from the original architecture, with just a 1.5-centimetre stretch between the front and rear wheels and similarly small increases in width and body height.

Inside, Nissan increased the Rogue's load capacity by about 20 per cent, thanks to a new fold-flat passenger seat. Overall interior volume is increased by about 10 per cent.

Nissan now offers a third-row seating option for the Rogue, which makes it the only small ute in its class outside of the Mitsubishi Outlander with the capacity to transport up to seven passengers. Access is secured by sliding the split-fold-ing second-row bench forward up to nine inches, but as with most three-row arrangements it's best to position only smaller folks in the back row for short journeys and surrender any meaningful amount of stowage space while it's in use.

The remaining restyled cabin area is a place of comfort and joy, especially the restyled dash/control panel layout and the NASA-inspired "Zero Gravity" front seats (similar to the ones in the Nissan Altima sedan). They really do the trick on extended trips, especially with the optional progressive quick-heat system that warms the thighs and hips before extending warmth to other body areas. Returning is a 175-horsepower 2.5-litre four-cylinder engine. It's connected to a continuously variable transmission (CVT) that now performs more like a traditional automatic in operation and performance. A redesigned belt and pulley system plus a sport-mode switch for the driver sharpens transmission operation and throttle response.

Various traction and control aids make winter tripping tolerable. The $2,000 all-wheel-drive option—a must-have for snow-bound buyers—redirects engine torque from the front to the rear, or to individual wheels, as necessary. The AWD can also be locked in 50/50 mode (front/back) at speeds below 40 km-h.

Other safety and comfort systems can be brought into play on the Rogue, such as Active Ride Control that uses the brakes and engine torque to help smooth rough-road jounces, Active Trace Control that applies the inner or outer brakes as needed for more directionally precise cornering and Active Engine Braking that automatically reduces engine torque to help slow down the vehicle while you're using the brake pedal.

Options include a power-adjustable driver's panorama sunroof and "Around View Monitor" that shows a bird's-eye view of what's going on around you. Also optional is a leather interior and a navigation system, which of course inflates the Rogue's $25,100 base price but allows buyers to take the luxury route whether heading to and from work, or heading outdoors for some cold-weather fun.

Retail ready fuel-cell cars just 18 months away

Clean process. Toyota's new concept creates electricity to power an electric motor using hydrogen and oxygen from the air

PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

Fuel-cell vehicles have always had an aura of science fiction about them, even though the science has been around since 1850 or so, when Sir William Grove first mused about generating electricity by exploiting how electrons hold water together.

Don't worry, this will not be a science lesson.

Science and I stopped being friends in grade nine, when I wondered how the mild acid in a glass beaker would fair in a Styrofoam cup, and the acid ate the Styrofoam cup, and the finish on the desk, and the finish on the floor, and caused Mr. Ramsey to be very ill-tempered with me.

I guess the vague science fiction feel comes from the notion of something could be a "fuel" — in this case hydrogen — yet only produce water as an "emission." It doesn't sound natural, in our lives so used to, and tied to, the combustion of petrochemicals.

The only thing I want to say today about fuel cell vehicles is how close they are to actually being a fully retail product. Hyundai, Toyota, Honda, BMW and Mercedes-Benz have all officially announced intentions to have "retail ready" fuel-cell vehicles in showrooms within 18 to 24 months, depending on the market.

Two years goes by fast. It's already been three years since Charlie Sheen was last seen on Two and a Half Men.

The manufacturers are deep into testing the actual fuel-cell components we will see on these retail units. No more going back to the drawing board for another blue-sky concept.

Toyota's fuel-cell test mule, for example, has

Under the skin of Toyota's latest concept vehicle, the FCV, are fuel-cell components destined for actual production vehicles. BOTH IMAGES PROVIDED been raking up miles in North America for over a year now, including a deep freeze stint in Yellowknife.

The ultra futuristic-looking hydrogen tank in place.

Off course, we still need a hydrogen re-fueling infrastructure, and that is not progressing along swimmingly. In fact, right now there is not one publicly accessible hydrogen station in all of Canada, and no immediate plans to build any amount.

But say we overlook that alarming impediment and say fuel-cell vehicles will be a major force in the next few decades — because now it's time to look beyond fuel-cells. Yes, fuel cells are barely here, or more correctly not even here yet — but don't we need to know what will be the next big vehicle propulsion thing, after fuel cells?

Yes we need to know, but details are sketchy.

There doesn't seem to be one imminent and/or dominate science or technology currently poised to add to the list of major ways vehicles have been driven. So far on the timeline there is steam, electricity, the internal combustion engine using various petrochemicals, more electricity, and fuel-cells using hydrogen.

Maybe quantum physics will figure in somehow. There is some discussion about a quantum propulsion machine. I'd explain it, but I'd have to understand it first, and that's not going to happen.

Buick Regal GS displays its true grip

Auto know. Winter ice testing has become the cool way to show just how hot modern AWD systems are

wheelbasemedia.com

"We wanted to go someplace where we would be virtually guaranteed to experience winter conditions." Right, then.

Katie Bjoerk of Buick explains why we're traveling the slippery back roads near Montreal, Quebec, alongside the frozen Ottawa River. The car is a 2014 Regal GS equipped with all-wheel-drive.

It's mid-February and it will be another six to eight weeks before the river ice is completely gone. By then a ferry will have replaced the ice "bridge" (in reality just a clean sheet of glassy ice that's maintained by the ferry owner during the winter). The cost of passage — $6.50 — is the same whether you cross on ice in the winter or over water in the summer.

It seems a bit extreme, but winter testing is a necessity. Really cold weather is tough on drivetrains, brakes, electrical systems and related components. It's especially critical that they pass muster on any new model before it enters full production.

It's a growing trend to invite auto writers from all over North America to visit these frozen climes to closely examine (as in beat up on) all-wheel-drive systems. Product demonstrations involve subjecting vehicles to the kind of rigorous driving that most owners would never attempt on their own, simply because they can't go out of bounds in real-world driving.

In the past few weeks, no fewer than four automakers have organized such events in the Montreal region. In fact a couple of tracks that are used for motocross, drag racing and go-karting now cater to such manufacturer-sponsored gatherings.

Their specially groomed facilities provide a way to explore AWD capabilities in ways that would be impossible to do on public roads.

Bjoerk has arranged Buick's sub-zero field trip to demonstrate the capabilities of the Regal's new all-wheel-drive system that has been added to the option sheet for 2014.

Test passed

The Regal proves to be a steady, stable performer on some typical (for the region) snow-packed roads.

The Regal proves to be a steady, stable performer on some typical (for the region) snow-packed roads. Its road holding is helped by the electronic intervention hardware, along with a set of super-grippy Michelin snow tires. Quebec's enlightened transportation authority has made snow tires mandatory during the winter months and for good reason. Mother Nature can be downright cruel and conditions dangerous at this time of year.

The weather is miserable at the ICAR track for the test trials. The temperature is somewhere around -25 C and strong northerly gusts make it feel much colder. In other words, it's Bjoerk's idea of perfection.

A half-dozen or so Regal GS AWD models are on hand and have been thoughtfully prewarmed. The test schedule includes a single and figure eight skid pad (more accurately, a slide pad), a slalom course, a short, but twisty road course with blind turns (thanks to high banks of plowed snow) and a timed loop to test the driver's mastery of winter conditions.

The GS is fully qualified for the proceedings. The car is a hefty 1,800 kilograms, yet it feels surprisingly light on its feet, thanks to its new turbocharged 2.0-litre four-cylinder engine that makes 259 horsepower and 295 pound feet of torque. The power is impressive, but at Le Circuit ICAR it's all about traction and finesse; here, both will get a workout.

The AWD apportions 90 per cent of the available torque to the front wheels under normal driving conditions. But when loss of traction is detected it can reverse the front-to-back torque and vary it from left to right at the rear wheels, which helps to guide the car precisely through a corner.

The AWD is assisted by the Regal's limited-slip differential (LSD) and traction/stability controls to reduce skids and spins. When both systems are in play, the Regal can maneuver around the slide pad and track with aplomb.

Even so, they can't override the laws of physics and ag-

Although we're here to test the competency of the Buick Regal AWD, it's also a pretty car with a hunkered down stance. That's an ice-fishing shack, if you didn't know.

Hot times in the snow

2014 Buick Regal GS AWD

- Four-door mid-size sport/luxury sedan
- 2.0-litre DOHC I4, turbocharged, 259 horsepower, 295 pound-feet of torque
- Six-speed automatic transmission
- 10.9/7.3 l/100 km (city/highway)
- Base price: $43,000

gressive driving is frequently rewarded with a grille full of snow bank.

The contrast comes with both the LSD and the traction/stability controls turned off. At that point the Regal becomes nearly impossible to steer, stop, or even gain any forward momentum over ICAR's superslick surfaces. Since you can't mess around on public roads to fully explore the limits, or lack thereof, the experience here is proof that modern electronics actually work. And that's the point.

Because the limits of adhesion are so low on ice and snow, there's a high level of danger at regular travelling speeds that's almost impossible to feel and read. Modern AWD can't save your bacon in every situation, but it sure helps. ALL IMAGES WHEELBASE

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20

The Sun in Pisces at this time of year can make you emotional and you will find it hard to hide your feelings today. Why would you want to? Honesty is essential in all situations.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21

What comes to light in an unexpected manner today will most likely improve your bargaining position. It will also remind you that you that you have friends you can count on.

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

Fight for your rights today, no matter how overwhelming the odds may be. Actually the odds are not nearly stacked against you to the extent you believe. Rivals are as scared of you as you are of them.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

The more others say you can trust them today, the more cautious you should be. In any negotiations you must get promises in writing at every stage. If you don't, they will likely turn out to be worthless.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

You know what to say and do to win friends and relatives to your way of thinking. Whether your way of thinking is correct is another matter entirely — but since when do Leos worry about things like that?

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

A positive outlook in the face of adversity is essential. Because Virgo is a sign that gets caught up in details, you have a tendency to think it's the end of the world when little things go wrong.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

A plan that has been in a state of limbo since the start of the year will begin to move forward again today. Don't try to do everything at once though. You'll catch up.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

If you do anything to excess between now and the full moon on the 16th you will regret it, so tone down your act and don't try so hard to impress friends or co-workers.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

You have no doubts and no reason to believe you will not succeed at the tasks you have set yourself. Rivals may try to derail your plans over the next few days but they won't come close to succeeding.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

Keep options open over the next 24 hours, especially in dealing with co-workers. Because their plans are likely to change you may have to change too. If you're flexible, you will be in the money.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

Make an effort to stand above petty battled. It may look as if the world is going to hell in a handcart but that's only because you are taking too narrow a view of events.

Pisces

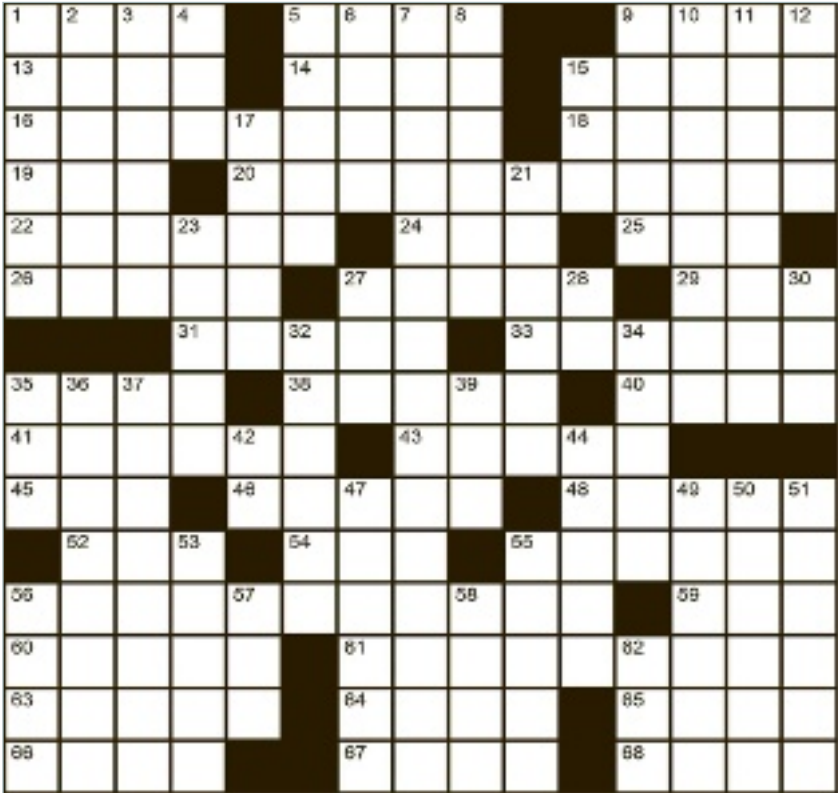

Feb. 20 - March 20

You need to raise your game. A week or so from now the Sun will move out of your birth sign, after which it may not be so easy to get things done. Don't aim just to be better, aim to be the best.
